ADVESTISING BATTES.

A Christmas Party.

Poor little Jane Barker, scannily dressed, and with a pale, wan face, pinched with poverty opened the door of her parents' humble cottage. to admit the good man that was to bring them in a Christmas dinner. What was his surprise to see not only Jane, her father and mother, and two little brothers, but six famished dogs and as many cate, ranged on other side of the one low room.

"How can you afford to keep to many dogs and cats when you are so poor?' said the good

Sameritan. "They don't belong to us, sir," said Jane, in a tender voice. 'They are nobody's dogs and cats. Eu; they stay round here in the neighborhood. They all know me, sir, and when I told them we were going to have a real dinner to-day, they followed me in. Don't curn them out, sir; I don't want them to think Pll break my promise!

THE GUESTS Yes! there was the dog with the yellow heir And one lame foot that he nursed with care. The wall-sye i hound that had lost his way, The poor old cur, and the terrior gray, With two small dogs that had 'seaped the pound,

Waiting to have the bones passed round. There was the cat that had seen her young Into the neighboring mili-pond flung; And the poor old purs that was left behind When her mistress moved, and was now quite blind: Two fierce old Toms, and two little kits,

Willing to dine on the smallest bits. The dinner over, the feasting dens,
Jane fed her pensioners one by one,
Gave each a drink from her besin bright,
While they wagged their tails with sheer delight;
Or washed their faces till every hair Shone like sik in the sunlight's giare.

Then she took the splint from the lame dog's too And smoothed the blind cat's coat of snow, And promised the two little kits a bed In her hood, when the hadn't it on her head; And counselled the two floreer Toms to be Friends in the inture, and quite agree. Then she told the shivering wall-eyed hound

That she'd do her best till his home was found And the mother cat, and the poor old our, That they ever would find a friend in her; Then she let them out at the rickety door, And washed her dishes and swept the floor. Now many a rich little girl that day Had a Chr s mas party bright and gay,

But we doubt if one in the whole bread earth Had a better time or more real mirth;

Or made such welcome kind bequests,
As did little Jane to her near dumb gugets. - By Mrs. M. A Kidder,

"Herodiade." machinations of the wicked Herodias, themselves to be bound by the historical facts, is not at all the some character as is presented to us in the New Testament, In Massenet's "Herodiade" she has been conversed to Christisnity by John the Baptist, and has afterward become a slave in the service of Hered, the Tetratch of Gallilee. She is ignorant of the name of her mother and unknown by ner, although SHAMOKIN RED ASH.

Making Coal a specialty, we sim to keep out. they are living to the palsos together. Herod terior of Herod's palace in Jerusalem. On the left stands an immense portico which serves as an entraces to the palace, and in the distance is seen in the dawning light a carayan which is preparing to enter the Holy city. Pharises and Samantan merchants enter, and a dispute arises between them when Pasanuel, the Chaldean, appears and succeeds in sliaying the tumuls. Seleme, flying from the palace, rushes on the stage. She is followed by Herod, who is about to pursue her when he is stopped by Peacauel, who wishes to give an account of a mission on which he has been sent. The Jewish people accept the Roman government, and the name of the Prophet John is greeted with poly acclemations on all sides. Herodias comes in when the shouts of the crowd ere at their loudest, and is evidently in a state WEST VINGINIA COALS, of the Baptist, who has insulted her cruelly. and as Herod hesitates, swears that she will kill him bers if. Joha sppeare, and his calm bearing frightens Herodias, who hurries away with her husband. Then follows the spowal of Salome's love. She seeks to touch the heart of the prophet but he is inexerable. The second scene shows the public place of Jerusalem. As Herod is icciting the Jews to robel agains: the Roman rule, trumpers are heard which an-nounce the arrival of Vitellius, the processul of Tiberius. Night has come on and the correge sivances smid the light of innumerable torches, the procession of lictors and Roman soldiers making a magnificent : polacle. As the women of Canasa are acclaimig the Prophet John, Herod denounces him as an aspirant to power, NO MONOPOLY IN PRICES-SPECIAL and on the order of Vitellius the B.p ist is at-res ed. The ourtain in the second act rists on the interior of the Temple of Solomon. At Salome is at her prey raffered enters the temple and approaches her. Neither his threats nor his entreatics can move her, for she loves another. The cartains of the saccatary are drawn aside for the religious ceremonies, in which are interpolated the secred dances. Vitellius, es-corted by Herod, Herodiss and Phannuel, arrives in the temple, when the priests and people de-mand the death of John, whose fate the Preconsul pieces in the hands of Hered. When Juhn appears Herod proposes to him to create a rising of the Jews sgainst the Romans. But this John refuses and ue is condemed to death. Salome wishes to share his fate, and as she denounces Herod's rival they are dragged away together. The third so: shows the dungeon in which the Baptist is imprisoned. John is near yielding to Salome's love, when the guards come to seek him. The last scene represents the barqueting hall. Here there are four groups of ballet, representing Explians, Amezons, captive Gauls and Phoenician wenizes in her her daughter, whom she had abar-dosed, and is about to yield, whom the execu-tioner appears bearing the bloody sword with which he has just slain the Prophet. Salome rushes upon Herodias to stab her when Heradias stops her with the words."I am your Salome turns her degger sgainet mother." her ewn breast and falls at her mother's feet,
